Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 26th.

WEST PARIS.

Burglary.

The store of Frank Small was entered by burglars, last week, Thursday morning at two o'clock. They spent the first part of the night in P. C. Fickett's new building breaking into a tool chest there and securing an auger and other tools to work with, went across to Mr. Small's store. They tried the back doors by boring holes into them, but finally went to the side door on the piazza where they succeeded in gaining an entrance by smashing out some glass and crawling through.

The noise awakened the family upstairs, but before Mr. Small could get down stairs the thieves had become alarmed and disappeared. It is supposed that they went off down the track as things they took were scattered along down that way. Sheriffs were summoned to secure them but to no success as yet.

Two tramps were arrested at Bryant's Pond but they did not prove to be the right ones. Two suspicious tramps were around and in the store the day before that were supposed to be the thieves. Not a very great deal was lost. A pile of clothing was found which they intended to take, but in their haste to escape was left.

Double Tragedy in Newry.

Murder and Suicide.

Ora Greene of this town went to the home of Beulah York and shot her with a rifle, two 32-caliber bullets having been fired into the body of Miss York. He then put the muzzle of the rifle at his own head and blew out his brains, killing himself instantly.

Greene has for some time lived in Newry and for the past two years has been infatuated with Miss York, believing at some future time she would think as he did and become his wife, but as the girl was young and her parents were opposed to Greene, they tried to persuade him to understand that they could never be married.

Greene is said to have made his threats to some boys that he would make her parents regret the heartache they had caused him by not giving their consent to the marriage. It is believed Greene was perfectly sane because of the many little rational acts he committed preparatory for his death.

Greene was about 33 years old. He had been some years in the West. He at one time was employed by and lived at Mr. York's but a few months ago was discharged and since lived with his mother and step-father, E. F. Knapp and wife.

The girl was exceptionally bright and sweet natured and very much beloved by all who knew her.

Sunday, the victim was buried from her parents' home. Rev. F. C. Potter, pastor of the M. E. church, officiated and a large number of relatives and friends of the deceased were in attendance. Among the floral offerings was a floral pillow marked "Schoolmate" from the girl's associates. Interment was in the local cemetery.

The singers were Mrs. Cyrene Little-hale and Mrs. Anne, soprano; Bessie Andrews, contralto; Dr. L. H. Wight, bass; Alice L. Billings, organist.

The words of Mr. Potter pictured to the minds of those present the necessity of the true teachings of the gospel of Christ in the heart and teaching, advocating and living up to the same through all the life thereby eradicating a germ of evil which if left unchecked might be transmitted through many generations growing and receiving nurture until its proportions might be exhibited and terminate in a similar crime as described above. Mr. Potter's whole discourse was full of sound reasoning and listened to by all with the closest attention.

The burial took place in Mount Will cemetery overlooking the Androscoggin, near the premises of the late Hiram York, an uncle of the deceased.

The outfit for burial was a white plush casket resting on a white bank interlaced with ferns and smilax. Friends came from far and near bringing sympathy and many floral offerings deeply mourning the extinguished light of a sweet promising life so suddenly taken by a murderous hand.

Beulah F. York was the only child of Orrington York. She was a school girl, would have been 15 years old Tuesday, Oct. 27. The shooting was done with a 32 Winchester, special, and caused almost instant death, the bullet passing through the heart and both lungs, horizontally through the body and into the wall of the room.

Beulah was sitting at a table within six feet of the window reading aloud to her mother who was doing up the evening work. When the shot came the girl arose and walked to the bedroom door at the farther end of the room a distance of 18 feet and there settled to the floor and lay on her face, expiring at once. She did not utter a word or any vocal sound after the shot came.

The murderer immediately reloaded his rifle and discharged it at his own head blowing away the whole left side and taking the whole brain from its cavity. There were indications that two shots went through the window but the testimony of the three witnesses at the place was that of hearing only two shots and those in quick succession.

The mother showed officer H. C. Barker the last sentence read by her daughter before being struck down. It was from her school lesson in the Fifth Reader, "Clouds and darkness are before me, I cannot see the way."

Mr. York was doing his evening chores at the barn across the road when he heard the shooting and immediately took his lantern and went to the house. The first he discovered of the terrible affair was the dead body of the murderer lying on his back with his head in the wall with path leading from the house to the barn. On entering the kitchen a more horrible scene was before him, his only child lying on the floor in a pool of her life's blood and just gasping for her breath the last time.

The third person present was Edwin Braley, an uncle to Beulah, and he was sitting at the same table with the unfortunate girl and next the window, in a side position, reading the evening paper. He thinks the bullet passed between his face and paper judging from the fragments of the broken glass that flew about.

Coroner A. W. Grover of Bethel was immediately summoned to the scene taking along constable H. C. Barker and took charge of the bodies and with Dr. L. H. Wight of Bethel examined the body of the girl and took measures to prepare it for burial.

The body of the murderer was taken by the coroner to his room in Bethel where it remained till Saturday when it was taken by his friends in Newry and given a burial in the family lot without funeral or religious service.

Coroner Grover held an inquest over the bodies on Friday with the following men composing the jury, J. U. Furlington, foreman; S. S. Whitney, Dr. E. White, Roy, H. H. Bean, Charles Mason and Algernon S. Chapman, finding a verdict according to the above facts.

Ora Greene was a laborer and mill engineer and one of those moving characters without any permanent aim in life especially of an elevated and intelligent type. He first came to Mr. York's in August, 1902, and helped him get his hay and from the first of September of that year until the first of September of this year he made his home mostly in the York family.

NORWAY AND VICINITY

Company D Easy Winners.

At the rifle shoot in Portland, Saturday afternoon, the team representing Norway made the highest score at both ranges capturing the Gov. Hill trophy, a handsome engraved loving cup for the highest score of the match; also the Col. Kendall trophy for the highest score of any company in the first regiment. Both these trophies must be won three times successively to become the property of the team winning.

Major B. F. Bradbury made the highest score on the headquarters team—29 at each range.

In the individual match at 600 yards Lieut. Hayden was fifth and Major B. F. Bradbury sixth with scores of 27 and 26 respectively.

In the revolver match Lieut. Hayden is third in the list, the total scores of the three leaders being the same—70. A strong raw wind was blowing and reduced the scores of all contestants.

Summary:

	200 Yards.	300 Yards.	400 Yards.	500 Yards.	600 Yards.	700 Yards.	800 Yards.	900 Yards.	1000 Yards.

A Snake Story.

Darwin Cobb writes to the "Listener" in the Boston Transcript: "I read of an eight-foot snake being killed, and found to have swallowed two frogs and a bird. This was considered something remarkable. Now I'll tell you a story that shall be a snake, but not a fish story."

"When I was a young fellow, nothing Cyrus and I enjoyed more than to catch snakes and study their motions as they waved in the air. One day I saw among the pea vines behind my Uncle Samuel's house in Norway, Me., an enormous striped snake. He was not very long, but he was very big. I at once gave chase. Over peas he glidingly sprang, and over the peas I leaped. Twice I thought I had him, but he was off. I wondered, then, why he appeared so unwieldy as to allow me to keep up the race with him."

"At last as he was curving over a thick vine I grabbed him by the neck. I soon made an end of him and then took his measurement. He was forty-six inches long. Now guess what made this voracious snake so unwieldy. I found inside of him a toad of the largest size, and much harder to swallow than a frog, and a striped snake eighteen inches long! You can swallow this story with out indignation, for I carefully measured both snakes. The little boy who cried because he couldn't eat any more pudding would read this story with interest."

You are liable to a sudden attack of Summer sickness and should keep in your house a bottle of Dr. SETH ARNOLD'S BALM, the best known remedy. Warranted to give satisfaction or money refunded by Frank Kimball, Norway, Me.

The November McClure's, which begins the twenty-second volume of that publication, is more than a mere magazine. In its three leading articles, it presents a vivid picture of sociological conditions in the United States. In another, it may prove most significant documentation. These articles are a new type of literature. They unite the patient research of the scholar to the brilliancy of the scholar.

Irving L. Loring, who is in Troop F, 7th U. S. Cavalry, sends us copies of the Guidon, a weekly paper published at Camp Thomas, Chickamauga, Tenn., by the soldiers. It is an extremely bright little sheet and a credit to the troop and army. Loring is the man who wrote the ADVERTISER many interesting letters of army life from Chickamauga and from Cuba, while he was with his regiment there.

All reports state that deer are very plentiful in Maine this year, but the hunters appear to be in some danger of being exterminated.

Among the Sweden Hills.

Up among the Sweden hills, where Nature began to lay on the brush with sweeps so broad that Maine might have boasted of her grandest view of the Presidential range, sits a little log cabin. It is unique in itself and through its builder possesses a history filled somewhat with tragedy.

It is not many years old, this little log cabin, though the man who thought out its construction so carefully is now dead, having passed away by his own hand some years ago in the great metropolis.

Long years before, he had called Sweden his home. That was when the future words, "the abandoned farm," were unknown here in Maine, and thence and plenty sat side by side in every dwelling that dotted the pleasant highway. The lad was sturdy and ambitious and soon his country home knew him no more. In the midst of city life he walked the road of success in business matters. Worldly cares thronged about him. Friends were not few. Everything tended to hold his attention to the world of the busy marts year in and year out.

But the man's brain there was a nook traveled many a time, and oft in dreams of day or night. It led back over the Maine hillsides where the pale arbutus trailed in springtime, where the goldenrod ripened in the summer and the harvest glowed in the autumn, and pulled and tugged upon his heart-strings and he said to himself at last, "The day will surely come when I can go back and take my rest amid the beauty of that dear old place." But the years slipped by and the man's life seemed to him to be a dream that he had dreamed.

One day he was walking through the woods, overlooking the marvelous scenery near at hand in the big, tumultuous hills and the majestic pose of the more distant White Mountain range. New trees have grown and been out and down again where those once stood which made the ridge of this quiet dwelling. Neatly matched, one has almost to look twice to prove that there are not the timbers of the common cottage. But the eye is caught at once by the odd appearance given by the central chimney. This is the key to the situation within the four square walls, for each room opens only into the central hall, the center of which is the huge fireplace, the blaze of which may be seen from any of these rooms, by day or night. It was the man's dream, and he had planned amid the rural beauty of this secluded spot.

New trees have grown and been out and down again where those once stood which made the ridge of this quiet dwelling. Neatly matched, one has almost to look twice to prove that there are not the timbers of the common cottage. But the eye is caught at once by the odd appearance given by the central chimney. This is the key to the situation within the four square walls, for each room opens only into the central hall, the center of which is the huge fireplace, the blaze of which may be seen from any of these rooms, by day or night. It was the man's dream, and he had planned amid the rural beauty of this secluded spot.

Not Every Person Should be Allowed to Handle a Gun.

The frequency of "accidents" among hunters has grown to such an extent during the past few years as to cause much discussion in sporting circles everywhere, and various means have been suggested for remedying the evil. The trouble invariably comes from allowing all persons to hunt, when there are so many who should not be trusted to handle a firearm of any kind. Men and boys who know nothing about hunting and who are utterly indifferent to the safety of others, can travel the woods with shotguns or the still more deadly modern rifles, with their capacity for throwing a bullet a mile through the air, and a great portion of them in the woods, and the temptation to shoot at everything they see moving. Scores of men have been killed or wounded by these two hunters, who have offered as an excuse the statement that they thought their victim was a deer or some such animal.

While such excuses have been accepted by the easy-going authorities of the country districts, most of whom are only too glad to find any excuse which will relieve them of the trouble of prosecuting a man who has been caught would ever "take stock" in them. In fact, many would consider a man who would make such a "mistake" even more deserving of punishment than one who would deliberately fire at a person in a would-be hunting mission. The latter would only harm a man who had entered into a quarrel with him and who might be trying to do even worse injury to him, while the careless hunter makes a purely innocent person his victim.

No gun hunter would ever fire at any game who is fit to be trusted with a rifle. The game laws in most States prohibit the killing of fawns as well as some other animals which might be mistaken for a deer in the thick brush, and the hunter who is fit to be trusted with a rifle in the woods will never fire until he has plainly seen his prey and knows just what it is. No hunter who follows that rule ever shoots a man for a deer. In Maine a stringent law has been enacted making these so-called "mistakes" punishable by a severe penalty, and the better class of hunters have been anxious to see it enforced to the limit. So many careless shootings have occurred in the hunting districts that good many men have given up hunting there merely because their lives are not safe in the wood where such careless hunters are allowed to travel. Only by enforcing the law to the limit in every case can the careless hunters be kept with their hands.

It was almost a miracle. Burdock Blood Bitters cured me of a terrible blood poisoning. I am very grateful. Miss Julia Filbridge, West Cornwall, Conn.

At the session of the Grand Encampment, I. O. O. F. of Maine, last week, A. S. Kimball of Norway was re-elected grand representative for two years. District deputy grand Patriarchs were appointed as follows:—District No. 6, Alfred W. Belcher, Denmark; No. 6, Geo. W. Haskell, South Paris; No. 6, Ernest C. Holbrook, Mechanic Falls; No. 8, Peter G. Barrett, Dixfield.

Bed Blankets and Puffs

These cold nights make us feel the need of warmer bedding, and now is the time to get it, while our stock is large. We bought our Cotton Blankets early, so we can sell them as cheap as last year, regardless of the high prices of cotton.

ONE LOT of good quality Cotton Blankets, 10-4 size, white or colored, with colored border, per pair, 59c

ONE LOT good weight Cotton Blankets, large 11-4 size, white or colored, with border. Pair, 99c

ONE LOT of Extra Heavy Cotton Blankets, 11-4 size, colored and white, colored border. Pair, $1.98

ONE LOT of Heavy Cotton and Wool Mixtures, 11-4 size, white and colored, very warm. Pair, $3.50

ONE LOT of strictly All-wool Blankets, extra large and heavy, colored border, silk bound, $5.00

ONE LOT of good Puffs, two yards square, filled with clean cotton batt and covered with pretty figured material, $1.00

ONE LOT Heavy Puffs, two yards wide, two and one-half yards long, filled with fine batt, and covered with figured challie, $2.25
